Gospel Notes

Although Jesus is fully aware that his journey to Jerusalem will end in his passion and death, he is also aware that the mission to proclaim the good news is one that must be continued. In Luke's gospel, which is probably more Gentile than the others, the theme of the universality of Jesus' message is more to the fore. We can see one of the ways that is shown in the fact that seventy two disciples are sent out to prepare the way for him. In the ancient world it was believed that there were seventy two nations on earth and so this is symbolic of a mission to the whole world.

Two things are striking in the story: one is the simple urgency of the task of proclaiming the message. Some will accept it, others will not, but their rejection of the message should not be on account of any failing on the part of the messengers. The other striking feature is their success. They rejoice on their return because they know that are participating in the ultimate struggle of good over evil. In sharing their joy, however, Jesus reminds them that it is not about them but about God working through them and that should be the source of their joy. It is a call to humility.

Reflection

As we come to the end of Galatians, one can't help feeling that Paul is somewhat tired and even downcast at the thought that all his work among these people was being so seriously undermined. At the same time he is a realist and he is under no illusions about the difficulties involved in being true to the gospel. This in turn brings him to one of his greatest insights. As followers of Jesus we are indeed a new creation but our coming to birth is not painless so we should not be surprised when we are asked to share in the passion of the one who brings us to life. Unlike Paul and the seventy two, we may not always understand exactly where our mission lies but in the daily struggle to be faithful to Jesus and the gospel we know that our names are written in heaven and that is a reason to rejoice.
